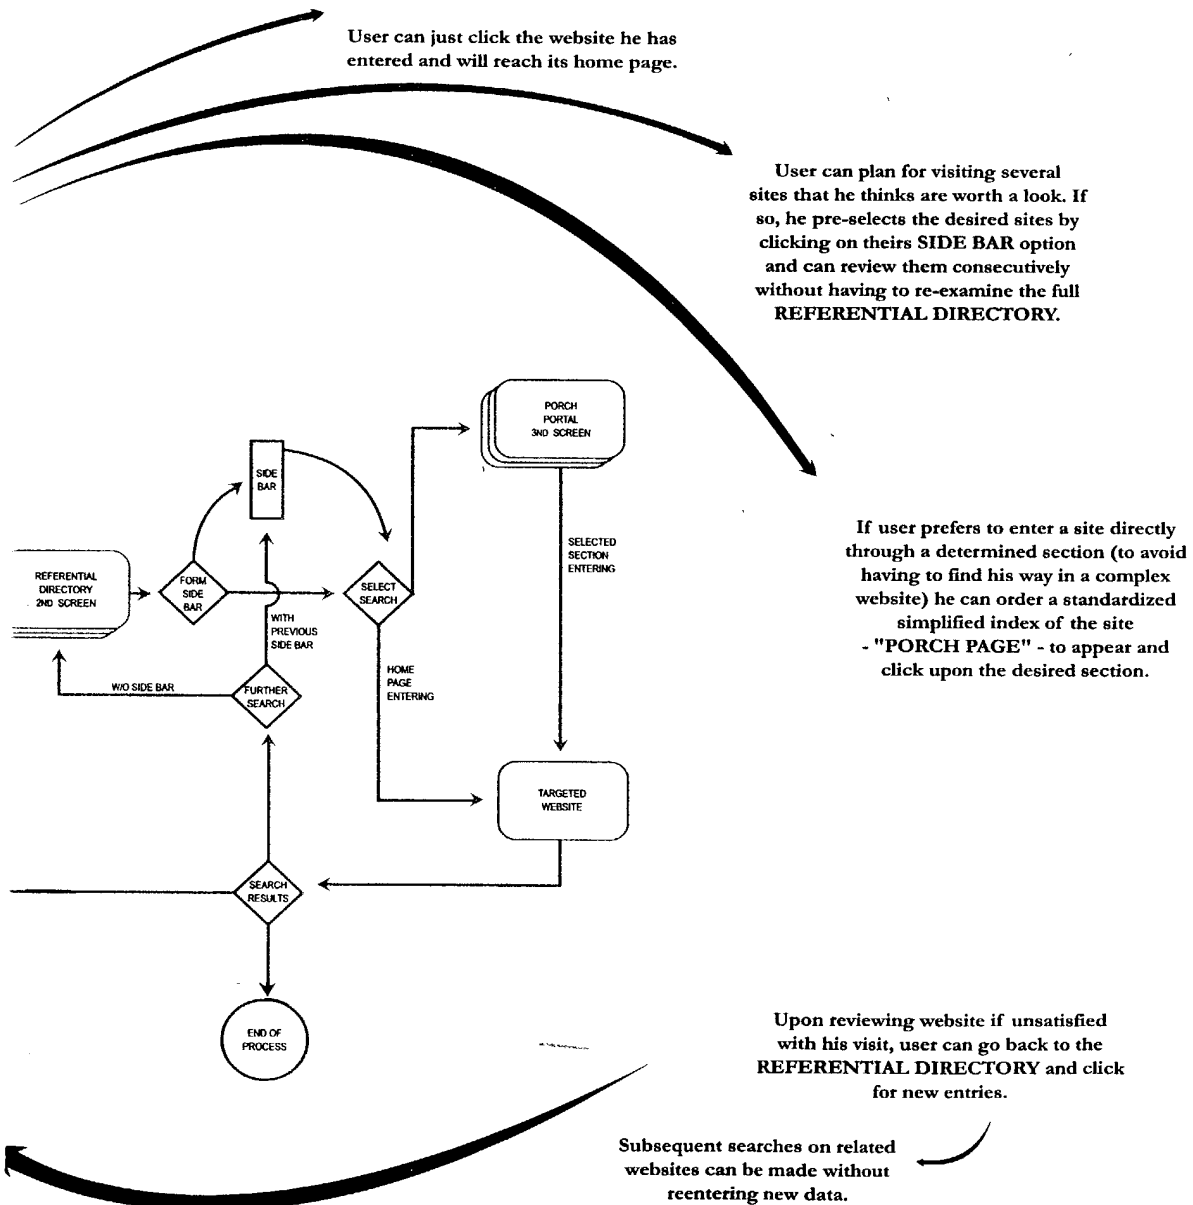

Fig. 12-A.
System's E-mail function.

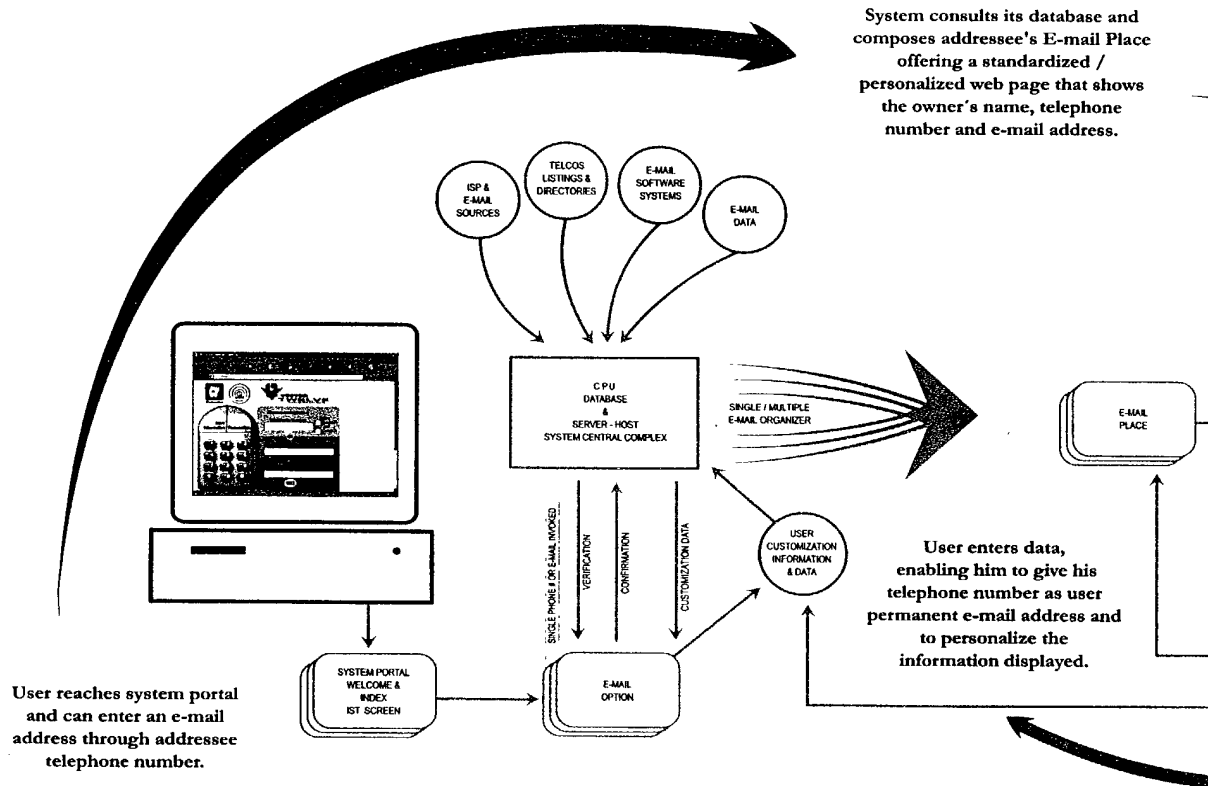

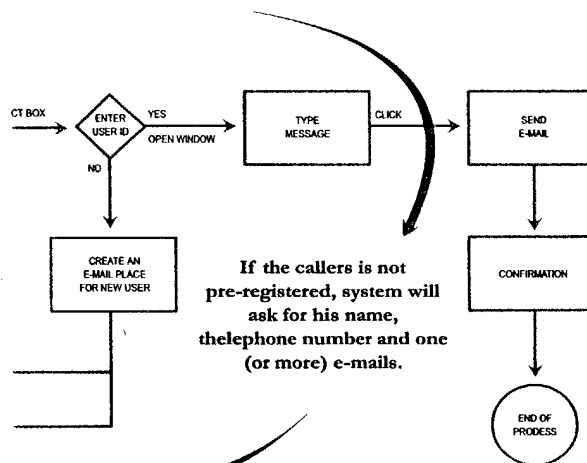

Fig. 12-B.

Optionally, E-mail Place owner can post standing information regarding his street address, business line, position, specialty and general messages or instructions for his callers.

E-mail Place can also contain several e-mail boxes meant to classify incoming messages according to different subjects, including some that can be password protected.

The caller, upon registering (if not pre-registered) types his message and sends it to the addressee.

As any box is selected the system will ask for callers ID, consisting in caller's pre-registered telephone number to allow writing the intended messages.

Incoming messages typed in any of the E-mail Place boxes will be redirected to the owner's e-mail server, where he will check it in the normal way.
